

What is Situational Homelessness?

Situational homelessness is the status of being forced to live without stable housing due to a life-altering event, such as job loss, domestic violence, medical emergency, or natural disaster. Without a safety net of financial savings to rely on, an increasing number of Americans find themselves at risk.

61%

of Americans live paycheck to paycheck.

25%

of Americans do not have savings to cover an unexpected emergency.

28%

people experiencing homelessness do so as part of a family with children.

Entryway works with participants who are facing situational homelessness.

What's the difference between that and chronic homelessness?

Situational Homelessness

- Triggered by a life-altering event
- Account for about 75% of homelessness cases
- Can lead to chronic homelessness
- Staying in shelters, cars, motels, or doubled up with family members

Chronic Homelessness

- A pattern of homelessness
- Less common compared to situational homelessness
- Linked to a disability, mental health condition, substance use, or prior incarceration
- Staying in shelters or unsheltered
